Competition / Performance Seminar:

Nothing beats THE THIRD WAY as a tried and true approach! No other animal training attempts can match the challenges faced by dog trainers who are training for competitions, assistance or services. Our dogs need more skills, must perform under more distracting situations, and have more freedom to leave than any other performing species. In addition, there is no animal/human bond that is more emotionally demanding than the dog/human relationship. Chris has spent her life developing a program to meet these explicit and difficult challenges. This seminar is designed to cover how to maximize training time to successfully develop a great relationship and teach the specialized requirements for Novice, Open and Utility obedience competitions.

Learn effective step-by-step recipes for teaching dogs how to give their utmost attention and have rock-solid stays. Learn about clever props, games and techniques for teaching dogs how to briskly and accurately find and maintain front and heel positions, jump all types of jumps (and at angles), retrieve objects quickly and reliably without problems such as mouthing or not returning promptly, and precisely and immediately assume, maintain, and change stand, sit and down positions.

Once these important foundation skills are established, tried and true techniques will be presented for advanced exercises, such as the retrieving skills necessary for scent discrimination and CKC, AKC and UKC glove exercises. Lastly, winning techniques will be presented for go-outs that are straight, quick and never shortened; and directed jumping skills that are dependable.

About Chris Bach:

“Dedicated to perfecting the relationship between people and dogs by KNOWING more about them, LOVING them for what they are, and TEACHING them how to live in harmony with people.”

Chris Bach has been training dogs all her life. Using THE THIRD WAY, Chris's training accomplishments include multiple 200 scores, High-in-Trials and OTCh's. Many of her students are top competitors in multiple disciplines. She has spent years counselling pet owners about behaviour and training. She is intimately involved with the service dog industry and has donated one of her well-trained German Shepherd Dogs to a deserving recipient. In addition, she has developed a Puppy Kindergarten class curriculum that is cutting-edge in the industry today.

Chris is a charter board member of the International Association of Animal Behavior Consultants. She was also asked to join the American Humane Association committee, which brought together top U.S. trainers to build a code of ethics and guidelines for logical and humane dog training. She has written a series of articles for Front and Finish magazine, and continues to author manuscripts about THE THIRD WAY. She also conducts seminars about dog behaviour and training across the United States and Canada, and is well-known for her unique and proven approach to teaching reliable skills and enhancing all aspects of the dog/human relationship.
